Most semiconductor devices require adding impurities to silicon to make it "n-type" or "p-type." N-type silicon is commonly doped with a semi-metal that has one more valence electron. P-type silicon is commonly doped with a non-metal that has one fewer valence electrons. For 10 points each -- name those two doping elements, the first best known as a poison, and the other better known for being almost as hard as a diamond.

ANSWER: ARSENIC
BORON
